The Measure of Success

How does one measure success? Our culture is quick to applaud fame, fortune and power. However, time has a way of erasing the temporary and bringing light to the eternal. We must choose what we will live for and what we will die for. We must not fail as individuals to pass down our rich heritage of values and spiritual beliefs to our children and to our children's children.

In reviewing life's accomplishments, one can gaze into the sparkle of a grandchild's young eyes and see the reflection of a job well done.

This is success above all else... and its importance is beyond measure.

"Train up a child in the way he should go..." Prov. 22:6
